

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

[49] A data recovery methodology with bound transaction data loss is described in which a database operator is allowed to set a bound that limits the number of transactions that can be lost. Transactions are placed in a buffer to be sent asynchronously to the standby system and synchronized based on the predetermined bound and on the number of transactions currently in the buffer.